Boston College makes it easy to enhance your online scholarly identity by registering for an ORCID ID.

Distinguish yourself with ORCID!

ORCID is a nonprofit, international effort to register persistent IDs for authors and researchers. It eliminates name ambiguity and lets you claim your work, build a profile and enhance your visibility. Your ORCID ID will:

- Serve as a unique, persistent identifier for you throughout your career, even if you change your name or use different variants
- Distinguish your work from others' in the field
- Allow you to create a profile that connects all of your publications, articles, datasets, and other scholarly outputs with your ID
- Streamline submissions to publishers, grant funders, and associations, which increasingly integrate ORCIDs and send data to your profile
- Allow you to import citations to your works into your Faculty Annual Report
- Give you control over what is made public, private, or available only to trusted parties

You can go to ORCID at BC (bc.edu/orcid) and sign up. This will assign an ORCID and link it to your BC credentials.

Going forward, sign in at orcid.org, build your profile and use it to raise the visibility of your work. The link to your ORCID profile will be added to your Boston College faculty profile page and you can add it to your email signature, CV, and other publications and presentations. One click will bring researchers and potential collaborators to your list of works. The more you use the ORCID ID, the more it enhances your visibility and builds your full list of academic achievements.

Learn more about ORCID at BC and read the Provost’s letter advocating for ORCID use at libguides.bc.edu/orcid.